Expanding the Role of Nonclinical Personnel in the OR

Hemingway M, Freehan M, Morissey L

Abstract

Ideally, quality health care should be accessible, affordable, and equitable. Working toward these goals in the OR necessitates examining and redesigning work processes and nursing workflow to make better use of the education and skills of perioperative nurses and assistive personnel. This article describes a pilot project undertaken in the OR at Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, to identify tasks that took nurses away from direct patient care and to better incorporate assistive personnel into the workflow to increase nurses' contact with patients. The pilot program resulted in an expanded role for assistive personnel and more direct patient contact for nurses. Copyright © 2010 AORN, Inc. Published by Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Caring for Burn Patients at the United States Institute of Surgical Research: The Nurses' Multifaceted Roles.

Sesto-Melkin M, Yoder LH, Gaylord KM.
United States Army Institute of Surgical Research, Fort Sam Houston, Texas 78234, USA.

Abstract
Nursing plays a critical role in the comprehensive burn care delivered at the US Army Institute of Surgical Research, otherwise known as the US Army's Burn Center serving the Department of Defense. This center serves as a model for burn units nationally and internationally. It also provides a challenging and innovative work environment for military and civilian nurses. Nurses in the Burn Center contribute to innovations in acute, rehabilitative, and psychological care for patients with burns. This article provides an overview of the complex nursing care provided to burn patients treated at the Burn Center. Copyright © 2010 Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.
